NO MONEY FOR M'KEE ROAD NOW

State Highway Commission Turns Down Application For Help In Building Highway

A delegation of loyal good roads boosters from Jackson county passed through Richmond Tuesday morning en route home from Frankfort greatly discouraged. They had been before the State Highway Department seeking state and federal aid for the building of the highway over the hills into Jackson county and on to their county seat, McKee.

Although Jackson county has voted $125,000 in bonds and stands ready to make up by subscription about $25,000 more, these gentlemen were unable to obtain any assurance that the Highway Department will cooperate in the building of this great desired road, anywhere in the near future. They brought every fact possible before the Highway Commission showing the great need of this roadway. They also pointed out that Madison county's fiscal court had agreed to contribute $6,000 toward the completion of the roadway the short distance necessary to the Jackson county line. But the State Highway Department is reported to have said it has no money at present to put on this road plan, and that the cost is going to be very heavy to build this road.

Squire William Hurst said that the Jackson county men offered to work for and co-operate in the building of a roadway by any route that might be suggested, just so his people could get out of the mud. He said that his people offered to take the Seaford-Cane route, if they couldn't get a closer road to Richmond. However, he declares the Highway Commission engineers said that some $3,000 or $4,000 a mile would be necessary to complete the present portion of the road along that route and when the work got to Jackson county the cost would run up to something like $18,000 a mile. Such a figure, of course, staggered everyone.

The State Highway Commission had an engineer go over this proposed route over the hills and into Jackson county a few weeks ago, and it is supposed that he must have made a very unfavorable report for the State Commission to "sit down" on such an urgent plea for a road with such emphasis. All agree that such a road would prove of vast benefit to thousands of people who know not the meaning of a good road. It would open up an immense territory back in Jackson, Clay and other mountain counties which have no other outlet to highways.

Squire Hurst, who reported the result of the trip to Frankfort to the Daily Register, was greatly discouraged. He declared he would go back to his little blacksmith shop in Clover Bottom much disappointed.

"I have taken my time off and worked for good roads for three or four years, and I will still work for them to the best of my ability," declared Squire Hurst. "But it does seem a shame that those fellows at Frankfort are spending so much money on the blue grass roads and won't give us a little up in the mountains and help us out of the mud."

In the Jackson county delegation besides Squire Hurst, were W. R. Reynolds, of Tyner, county agricultural agent for Jackson county, and County Judge Carter Moore.

Many Richmond and Madison county men are deeply regretful that the State Highway Commission could not see its way to giving some help on this road now. They realize what an immense source of trade would be opened up to Madison county and Richmond by the building of such a road. In fact this county would become the outlet for all the back country trade that now scatters about indiscriminately wherever it can obtain an outlet on horseback or muleback or in log wagons.

A dispatch from Frankfort Tuesday said that the Highway Commission did approve two roads which will open up other mountainous sections and take them out of the mud.

One road for which Cumberland, Metcalfe and Barren county residents will undertake to raise $75,000, will be a continuation of a road built by Cumberland county

UTILITIES LINEMAN FALLS WITH POLE

J. D. Peel Sustains Broken Shoulder, Ribs and Other In- juries In Fall of 25 Feet

J. D. Peel, lineman for the Kentucky Utilities Company, was severely injured when a pole fell with him about 8:30 o'clock Wednesday morning. His left shoulder was broken in two places, two ribs were fractured and it is feared that they may have punctured the lung. He is receiving every possible attention at the Gibson Hospital.

Mr. Peel was working with Willie Wheeler placing a new cross arm on a pole on Fifth street. The weight caused the pole to snap off down in the ground Mr. Peel, who was near the top, went over with the pole, a distance of about 25 feet and the heavy timber struck on top of him. He was hardly conscious when picked up and rushed to the hospital. Manager George Fawkes, who had been with the crew a few minutes before the accident, saw to it that every attention was given his injured helper.

Mr. Peel came here about eight months ago from Winchester where he had been working for the company. His home is at Farmersville, Texas. He is unmarried. He is said to be a very fine electrician and has made many friends in town since coming here.

FEW FOUND LAST WEEK'S MISSING WORD

Replies to the Daily Register's Missing Word contest came in as numerous for the second week as they did for the first. But answers were not nearly so correct. Out of several hundred only four or five found the right word.

In the advertisement of J. S. Stanifer, the word "on" was left out of the last line above the signature. As it appeared in the advertisement the line read: "to see it and try a pair."

The line should have read: "to see it and try on a pair."

This week's page of advertisements will probably be printed tomorrow. It is probable that those who missed last week may find the next missing word, and perhaps those who found it last week may miss it this.

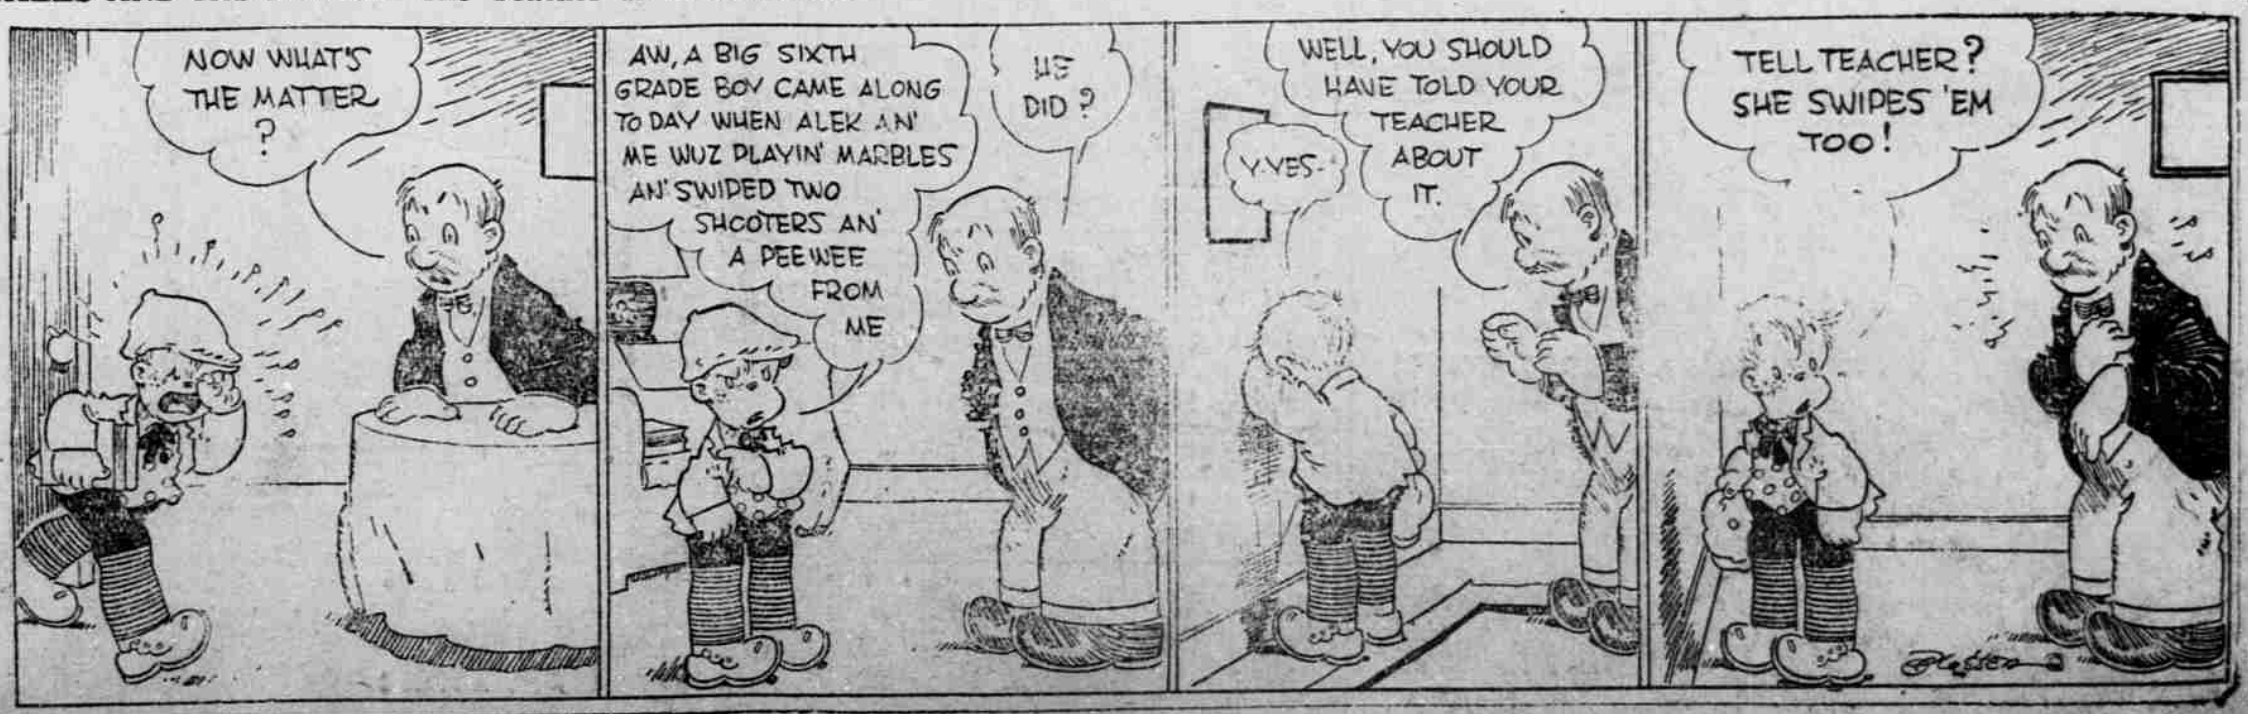

There are 11 more weekly appearances of the missing word page. Everyone has a chance yet to win the prizes. Business men who took advantage of the advertising stunt are loud in their praises. It makes one read the ads, and the business man who has a message to tell the public can be absolutely certain that his advertisement on this page is receiving careful attention.

Go To Opening Game

Quite a number of Richmond fans went to Cincinnati Wednesday morning to see the opening game of the national league between the Reds and Chicago. All Richmond and this section of Kentucky "pulls" mighty strong for the Reds at all times. Among those who went from here were Frank Chase, Bob Maupin, Jim Leeds, Peck Paynter and others.

SEMONOFF'S OUTRAGES TOLD BY OFFICERS

(By Associated Press)
Washington, April 12—The principal witnesses before the Senate Labor Committee today were Brigadier General Graves, commander of the American expeditionary forces in Siberia, and his chief aide, Lieut. Col. Charles H. Morrow, of Kentucky. At the hearing which is designed to bring about deportation of General Semenov, anti-Bolshevik leader, witnesses gave details of what they described as wanton and unregretted killings of Russians and some Americans in Siberia by Semenov's forces. Gen. Graves said he did not believe Semenov had any regard for human life. He asserted he waited in vain for some sign of regret from Semenov after a report to Semenov that his soldiers had killed two Americans.

6,000 TEACHERS AT FIRST K. E. A. SESSION

President, Mrs. Hall, Tells Them To Keep School Work Con- stantly Before Public

(By Associated Press)
Louisville, Ky., April 12—With 6,000 teachers here, the Kentucky Educational Association began its annual meeting here today. In her opening address Mrs. M. L. Hall, of Shelbyville president, urged that the schools be kept constantly before the public in the community in which they are located.

Louisville, Ky., April 12—Keep the schools constantly before the people of the community in which they are located, was the advice given the members of the Kentucky Educational Association at the first business session of the annual convention of the organization here today by Mrs. M. L. Hall, of Shelbyville, its president. "You don't give money gladly for something you don't know anything about," she told the teachers. "Most people do not know anything about the schools."

"The school boards know something about schools," continued Mrs. Hall. "They are terribly handicapped in their work by the indifference and lack of knowledge of the rest of the community. When they want to do anything new and the schools, there are always people who say 'it costs too much' without knowing a thing about it. But why don't they know a thing about it? Why aren't our schools really public? Well, chiefly because we haven't told the public; because we have been willing to let the schools be private."

The government of the state is inadequate, Mrs. Hall declared, and this is one of the things due, she asserted, to the fact that the "best people are not always sought to fill our offices," and as a result many of the subjects needing governmental care are neglected. "We must create the teaching process that will make the citizens of the future," she said. He must be responsible, not passively but acquisition of the state, seeking and acquiring the training that will make him an intelligent civic force. We must face that fact that our schools are the hotbed of our civilization, with its faults and when we find a question at the end we must come back with the question to the beginning."

Most people in this country leave school too young, Mrs. Hall asserted and with the rapid advance of education there is always danger that the citizen whose school days are rapidly receding will regard the school as a thing with which he has no part. She asserted that it is natural to idealize the methods used when one school and to overlook the new demands.

Declaring the Education was largely responsible for the increase in values of land Mrs. Hall asserted that "therefore there is nothing unjust or hurtful in levying a tax upon such values for the support of public Education." The report of the Kentucky Educational Survey Commission she characterized as the beacon light for the guidance of the educators of the state for the next ten years.
